A Message from the Chairman, Federal Deposit Insurance Corporation, and the Director, U.S. Census Bureau:

The Federal Deposit Insurance Corporation (FDIC) in collaboration with the U.S. Census Bureau has selected your financial institution to participate in the 2022 Small Business Lending Survey (SBLS 2022). This survey is a comprehensive effort by the FDIC to understand bank lending to small businesses in the United States. The FDIC last collected data for the Small Business Lending Survey in 2016. The survey will be administered electronically. Among other things, the survey addresses banks' small business lending loan processes and underwriting, markets and competition, volume of small business originations, as well as the use of financial technology and the response to the coronavirus pandemic. In 2021, the FDIC and the U.S. Census Bureau conducted extensive testing with banks to refine this survey and minimize the burden of the information collection on respondents.

Banks are uniquely poised to meet the credit needs of small businesses, which are an important component of the U.S. economy. Your institution's participation in the survey will provide valuable information to the FDIC, other policy makers, and the general public about the contribution of U.S. banks to small business lending.

In the next several weeks, your bank will receive information on how to access the survey. To ensure that the survey reaches the appropriate person at your bank, please provide the contact information of the person who will serve as your bank's primary survey contact by completing the Web Form at:
